Placement: A: The problem is not with the installer, it's with the torrent client. No error messages in the log-file, no.log file, nothing. Since the question does not mention which bit of software is responsible for this, it's hard to say. But it would help to get as much info as possible to debug the issue. Having said that, I can think of three different possibilities. Crash on the client. Part of the info might be contained in the log-file for that. The torrent client is configured to report errors in an obscure way, so that you can't read the log. The torrent client does not report errors for GUI problems, because the software is now working. To analyse the issue further, it's necessary to find out which client is responsible for the issue. You can do so by following these steps (under Windows): Go to control panel, find the torrent client settings Open the "Connection" tab Check the "Show transfer log" option Copy the generated.log file Open Notepad and search for "Error in" and locate the first occurrence. Copy the surrounding text (especially the ID of the torrent) Open torrent client GUI, in "settings", search for the entry "log file" and check if it points to the same file you found in step 5 If this does not help, look for any user feedback-options, like "show debug-dialog" (I don't know if this is available for all clients, and if so, how to access it).
